Understanding Square processing fees.

During these times it's even more important that we're fully transparent in how our payment processing fees are distributed. When a customer spends money with your business, Square only keeps a fraction of the fees, and most of that goes right back into your business.

Square fees by payment type

Card-present payments

When a customer taps, dips, or swipes their card in person, you pay 2.6% + 10¢ per transaction. There is a lower risk of fraudulent activity when the cardholder is present.

Amazon Pay fees

Transaction fees

As the economic impact of the COVID-19 crisis unfolds, we recognize our customers are being impacted in unprecedented ways. In an effort to mitigate some of the uncertainty, Amazon Pay is temporarily relaxing its chargeback policy in two ways: 1) your required chargeback response times are being extended to 20 days from the current 11 days, 2) we are proactively waiving our Disputed Chargeback Fee for merchant accounts in good standing. Both changes are in effect through September 30, 2020.

Amazon Pay fees are transaction-based and have a processing and authorization component. The transaction fee is composed of a domestic processing fee and an authorization fee, plus tax where applicable, charged when the purchase is successfully authorized and processed.

Compare a $10.00 transaction made using different solutions for different types of goods and services:

Solution	Transaction amount	Domestic processing fee	Authorization fee: $0.30	Total Transaction fee
Web & mobile	$10.00	2.9% ($0.29)	$0.30	$0.59
Alexa (real-world goods, services)	$10.00	4% ($0.40)	$0.30	$0.70
